Archibald Knox was appointed as a pupil-teacher at Douglas School of Art in 1882. A main interest was in Celtic design which was later reflected in his work for Liberty's. In 1897 Knox left the island to teach at Redhill School of Art where his friend and fellow Manxman, A J Collister was headmaster. Although known for his Art Nouveau designs in silver, pewter and enamels, Knox is best remembered on the Isle of Man as a watercolourist. His watercolours were shown at the Annual Knox Guild of Handicraft and Design Exhibition and in 1926 eighty of his watercolours were exhibited at the Canadian National Gallery in Ottawa.
